Considerations When Hiring a Brain Injury Lawyer

One of the most important decisions you will make in the wake of a TBI is choosing the right brain injury lawyer as a true advocate for your case.

Victims of traumatic brain injury, or TBI, must hire a lawyer skilled in this area of personal injury – one that has represented brain injury victims many times before and has been a consistent advocate for TBI victims. In addition to hiring the best brain injury lawyer in San Bernardino, it's critical for victims to get appropriate medical treatment to secure a full – not partial – recovery.

Despite advances, so little is known about the brain, with doctors and scientists still attempting to map out its many intricacies. One thing that is known is that all it takes is one impact, one fall, one blow to get concussions, chronic migraines, mobility issues, memory problems, paralysis or death. What's not always known is the long-term impact.

Injuries that started out fairly mild can progress going forward. With those uncertainties comes stress in trying to meet future financial obligations as you try to keep up with those extensive medical bills on top of your doctor and rehab appointments. One of the most important decisions you will make in the wake of a TBI is choosing the right brain injury lawyer in San Bernardino as a true advocate for your case.

Here are a few considerations to make before hiring an attorney.

1 Identify Your Type of Case

As with any other type of personal injury case, there are degrees of traumatic brain injuries. Some may start off minor, maybe involving a bad bump on the head and suspected concussion that just gets worse over time. Others are gravely serious from the moment of impact, such as in a crash with a semi-truck or the result of a violent attack.

A good lawyer will refer you to medical specialists such as radiologists and neurologists with whom they work frequently.

Tailoring your search to the appropriate personal injury attorney with experience in your case type and severity is vital. You need a brain injury attorney with a strong network of medical experts who can augment your case.

2 Research Your Injury and Associated Symptoms

Your attorney should be well-versed in pinpointing, with the help of a medical specialist such as a neurologist, what kind of injury you have based on your symptoms. Because TBIs range from mild to moderate to severe, your symptoms will have to be taken into account as well as how you sustained the injury. Some symptoms are quite obvious, such as fainting, dizziness, chronic headaches and minor mobility impairment. Others may start off very mild but worsen with time. No one can tell for sure. That's why your brain injury lawyer in San Bernardino will consult with your medical team to best determine what the estimated future medical costs will be.

3 Focused Expertise

Choosing a lawyer with the resources that can optimize the value of your TBI case is also important. A good lawyer will refer you to medical specialists such as radiologists and neurologists with whom they work frequently. These professionals can better substantiate your injuries and resulting medical requirements. On top of expertise in brain injuries, you'll want to choose an attorney with extensive experience in the accidents that cause them, from motorcycle accidents to falls.

Our personal injury attorneys help you win your case in a number of different ways:

TBIs are serious. There really is no time to waste. Your chosen attorney should get the ball rolling quickly, cutting through the red tape put up by the insurance companies and their adjusters, and demand an amount that will afford you and your family the highest quality of life possible.

Your attorney will fight for damages that may include:

- ✓ Medical and hospital bills
- ✓ Rehabilitation
- ✓ Future medical requirements
- ✓ Pain and suffering
- ✓ Lost wages
- ✓ Emotional distress
